Primary Sources

Do your students know how to find primary sources such as oral histories, manuscripts, original speeches, photographs, music, video files, original documents, and more? Infotopia's Primary Sources page has links to the most important archives of primary source documents and files, including those from the Library of Congress, an amazing online speech bank called American Rhetoric, digital collections from many libraries, and oral history archives.

It can be an incredible experience for students to read, listen to, and observe primary sources. Explore some of the resources below.

Welcome!

Welcome to the students and teachers from Schaumburg, Illinois! We are happy you are using Infotopia.info, VirtualLRC.com, Infotrek.info, and Kidtopia.info for your research needs!

infotopia

Infotopia.info is a web directory of the subjects studied in school or by home-schoolers.

Don't forget that you can simply do a "search" in the search box on any page of Infotopia to find age-appropriate and relevant sources.

Check out our YouTube video entitled "Amazing Google Search Tips You Never Knew About!" Use these search tips on any of our search engines to find relevant information for your search.

It's hard to find websites for grades K-4 on the subject of physical science. Some of our resources can be used directly by these students, and some are for teachers to use with the students. As always, we have an age-appropriate video on each subject. Try it out!

On our Physical Science page, you can find the following resources:

Matter
